2020

5 july till 10 july

This 2020 Summer School is the opportunity to explore deeper the multidimensional aspects of the touch sense. Through different workshops, you will increase your understanding about this theme and develop your own practical and theoretical skills as psychomotor therapist

Touch, an instrument to use in PMT, plays an important role in the development of healthy human beings. This because touching is related to physical, emotional, cognitive and social dimensions. Questioning what will be the implications of to touch and to be touched for psychomotor treatments. This requires a new understanding of the connections between those dimensions, for several pathologies or diseases by using various approaches for educational, preventive and therapeutic settings.
